In Neil Simon's famous Tony Award winning classic comedy "The Odd Couple", two divorced men share an apartment as they try to adjust to single life. Oscar Madison (Michael James Ford), (divorced by his wife because he's a financially irresponsible slob) is affable, charming and enjoys the simple things of life, like the Friday night poker game with the guys. When the easy going Oscar offers his maritally expelled best friend Felix (Nicholas Grennell), a place to stay, he soon understands why Frances (Felix's ex-wife) threw him out. Felix is a perfectionist 'nut', as he freely admits himself, and eventually he drives everyone crazy.

This odd couple soon discover that some opposites just don't attract, the result is a razor sharp comedy that is timeless in its impact.
